FUN FACT:

The practice of playing music while callers are on hold happened by accident! In 1962 Alfred Levy was an entrepreneur, inventor, and factory owner and he had discovered an issue with his phone lines in his factory.

One phone wire was loose and made contact with one of the buildings metal girders. This turned his factory, essentially, into a giant receiver. Coincidentally, there was a radio station next door to the factory. So when callers to the factory were put on hold, the broadcast from the radio station would transmit through the loose phone wire, and the callers would hear the music from the radio station.

Being the inventor Alfred Levy was, he developed the happy accident further and in 1966 he patented the Telephone Hold Program System!
